The Yale University Art Gallery is hiring Wurtele Gallery Teachers to teach school groups in the galleries.

Gallery Teachers will have four weeks of paid training in September and will begin teaching in the galleries in October.

Successful applicants will have a desire to work with children, a commitment to teaching from original works of art, and will be available to work up to ten hours a week on weekday mornings during the academic year.

The salary is $22.75 an hour.

Yale graduate students from all academic disciplines are invited to apply. Appointments are for the academic year and begin in September 2009. Gallery Teacher job applications are posted on the Yale students employment Web site, www.yalestudentjobs.org.

For more information, please contact Jessica Sack, the Jan and Frederick Mayer Associate Curator of Public Education at the Yale University Art Gallery, at 203.432.3706 or jessica.sack@yale.edu.